I met the once-amid a throng Of careless strangers and among The idle crowd 'twas but one eye Met mine with aught of sympathy; The accents of one vaice alone Fell on my ear with friendly tone-Within my heart it echoes yet, A music strain I'll ne'er forget; That kindly voice and eye were thine, And thou shalt be my Valentinel

I met thee once, as strangers meet, With callens brow-and soon complete Was thy forgetfulness of me; But I must ever think of thee! At morn-at noon-at eve-at night, Thine image beams on memory's sight; When at God's throne I nightly kneel, A prayer for thee will gently steal Forth from my heart to His pure shrine-And thou shalt be my Valentine!

PAYING THE PRINTER.

Genteel reader:-The ponderologically ovewhelming guyasentanizing extract from the mirific records of antiquity which follows, is if the Almanac lie not, in extract from a venerable manuscript found in an antiquated bakeoven, explaining the origin of the manner in which printers are generally paid.

"And Skinflint, the mighty ruler of the Squash-heads, having called his chief officers to his side, commanded them thus:

"Go ye into all my dominions, and command my people to gather tohether their treasures, even to a farthing, and pay all their debts; even the very smallest.

"The officers did as they were ommanded, and after a certain time, the ruler called them again unto him, and demanded of them how his or- our stock is in ders had been obeyed.

"O, mighty Skinflint, they replied, your commands were heard throughout the land, and fulfilled, for your people are obedient:

"And is every debt paid? "Yea, even the smallest.

"Are the merchant, the manufacturer and the laborer paid? "All paid.

"Are the tobacco and whisky bills settled? "All, all!

"And have my people been provident?-have they laid up a sufficiency to feed their cats and dogs?

"Yea, they have even done this. "Well, my people are worthy .-Now, go ye again unto them, and if there be anything left, tell them to take it and PAY THE PRINTER.

A SMART GIRL.-A fellow was wending his way a short time ago. through some narrow passage, when he met a pretty, modest girl. "Pray my dear," said he, "what do you call this passage?" Balaam's passage," replied the girl." "Ah! then," continued the puppy, "I am like Baham-stopped by an angel." "And I," rejoined the girl, as she pushed past him, "am like the angel-stopped by an ass."
